A Window into the Depths of Time

In the realm of archaeology, uncovering ancient burials is akin to unearthing a treasure trove of secrets. Each burial holds silent tales of lives lived and lost, revealing invaluable insights into the beliefs, rituals, and social structures of our ancestors. 'Ancestors: Prehistory of Britain in Seven Burials' takes this premise one step further, offering a captivating and comprehensive exploration of British prehistory through the meticulous analysis of seven extraordinary burials.

Seven Lives, Seven Stories

- The Ice Age Hunter: A man interred at Gough's Cave in Somerset, showcasing the hunting and gathering lifestyle of Mesolithic Britain.
- The Neolithic Woman: Buried at Hambledon Hill in Dorset, providing glimpses into the agricultural and community-oriented society of the Neolithic period.
- The Beaker Man: Discovered in Amesbury, Wiltshire, representing the Bronze Age's arrival of new technologies and cultural influences.
- The Iron Age Warrior: Unearthed at Danebury in Hampshire, embodying the fierce and organized nature of Iron Age society.
- The Romanized Briton: Excavated in York, revealing the complex cultural dynamics of Roman-occupied Britain.
- The Saxon Princess: Buried at Sutton Hoo in Suffolk, showcasing the grandeur and opulence of the Anglo-Saxon era.
- The Viking Raider: Discovered in Repton, Derbyshire, highlighting the far-reaching influence of Viking raids and settlements.

Expert Analysis, Engaging Narrative

The analysis of these burials is led by renowned archaeologist and author Neil Oliver, who brings decades of experience and a captivating storytelling style to the task. Through meticulous examination of skeletal remains, grave goods, and burial sites, Oliver paints a vivid picture of prehistoric Britain and its inhabitants.

From the intricate carvings on a Neolithic axe to the iron weaponry of an Iron Age warrior, each artifact and burial practice offers a glimpse into the lives, beliefs, and societal structures of our ancestors.
