The Duel

Hamilton, a brilliant orator and statesman, had been one of the most influential figures in the founding of the United States. Burr, a charismatic and ambitious politician, had served as Vice President under Thomas Jefferson.

In the years leading up to the duel, Hamilton and Burr had clashed repeatedly over political and personal matters. Hamilton had accused Burr of being a corrupt and unprincipled opportunist. Burr, in turn, had challenged Hamilton's honor and integrity.

On the morning of the duel, Hamilton and Burr met at Weehawken, a secluded spot overlooking the Hudson River. The two men exchanged shots, and Hamilton was fatally wounded. He died the following day.

He was charged with murder and fled the country. He eventually returned to the United States, but he never regained his former prominence.
