

"How the Grumpy American Fell in Love with France - From Skeptical Expat to Francophile in 1,000 Cafés"

Alexander Lobrano was a grumpy American expat living in Paris when he began writing this book. He had come to France with the best of intentions, but after years of dealing with bureaucracy, culture shock, and the occasional rude Parisian, he was ready to give up. But then he started spending more time in cafés.

Cafés are a way of life in France. They are places where people go to meet friends, read the newspaper, have a coffee, or simply watch the world go by. Lobrano found that the more time he spent in cafés, the more he began to understand and appreciate French culture. He learned about the importance of taking time to enjoy life, the value of good conversation, and the art of savoring a simple meal.

"How the Grumpy American Fell in Love with France" is a witty and honest memoir about Lobrano's journey from grumpy expat to Francophile. It is a book that will appeal to anyone who has ever dreamed of living abroad or who simply loves France.

Praise for "How the Grumpy American Fell in Love with France"

"Lobrano's book is a delightful and insightful read. He captures the essence of French culture with humor, heart, and a keen eye for detail. I highly recommend this book to anyone who loves France or is thinking about moving there." - David Lebovitz, author of "My Paris Kitchen"

"Lobrano's memoir is a charming and entertaining account of his journey from grumpy expat to Francophile. His writing is witty and insightful, and he has a knack for capturing the nuances of French culture. I laughed out loud many times while reading this book, and I highly recommend it to anyone who loves France or is curious about what it's like to live there." - Pamela Druckerman, author of "Bringing Up Bébé"
