Born in 1949 in Sunnyside, Washington, Dunbar's passion for science and space ignited at a young age. After graduating with honors from the University of Washington in chemical engineering, she embarked on a remarkable journey that would ultimately lead her to the stars.

Breaking Barriers and Achieving the Impossible

In 1978, Dunbar's dream of becoming an astronaut became a reality when she was selected by NASA as part of the first class of female astronauts. As a member of the astronaut corps, she underwent rigorous training and countless hours of preparation in anticipation of her historic missions to space.

Dunbar's first spaceflight occurred in 1985 aboard the Space Shuttle Discovery. During this mission, she became the first woman to conduct a spacewalk, embarking on a perilous journey outside the shuttle to install a critical satellite.

In 1995, Dunbar made history once again as the first woman to command the Space Shuttle Endeavour. Her leadership and expertise during this mission paved the way for future women astronauts and instilled confidence in explorers worldwide.

A Legacy of Inspiration and Discovery

Dunbar's accomplishments have not been limited to her time in space. As a dedicated educator and STEM advocate, she has dedicated herself to inspiring young minds to pursue careers in science and engineering.

Through her work with organizations such as the Girl Scouts and the National Space Society, Dunbar has mentored countless students, encouraging them to dream big and pursue their passions.
