A princess of Spain, Catherine arrived in England in 1501 as the bride of Henry's older brother, Arthur. However, tragedy struck when Arthur died just a few months later. Henry, desperate for a male heir, soon married Catherine himself, but their union remained childless for many years.

Catherine was a devout Catholic and a popular figure among the English people. However, her failure to produce a male heir ultimately sealed her fate. In 1533, Henry, determined to marry Anne Boleyn, divorced Catherine and had her banished from court.

Anne Boleyn: The Heretic Queen

Anne Boleyn, the second wife of Henry VIII, was a brilliant and ambitious woman who challenged the Catholic Church.

Anne Boleyn was a lady-in-waiting to Catherine of Aragon when she caught the eye of King Henry. Ambitious and determined, Anne refused to become Henry's mistress and insisted on marriage. Henry, infatuated and desperate to have his marriage to Catherine annulled, broke with the Catholic Church and established the Church of England.

Anne's reign as queen was short-lived. She failed to produce a male heir, and her outspoken nature and Protestant leanings alienated many at court. In 1536, she was accused of adultery and treason and executed at the Tower of London.

Jane Seymour: The Gentle Queen

Jane Seymour, a lady-in-waiting to Anne Boleyn, was Henry's third wife. Unlike her predecessors, Jane was a gentle and unassuming woman who avoided the political intrigues of court.

Jane's most significant achievement was the birth of Henry's son and heir, Edward VI. She died shortly after childbirth in 1537, but her brief reign is remembered for its relative peace and tranquility.

Anne of Cleves: The Flanders Mare

Anne of Cleves, the fourth wife of Henry VIII, was known for her large size and plain appearance.

Anne of Cleves was a German princess whose marriage to Henry was arranged as part of a political alliance. Henry was disappointed by Anne's appearance and her inability to speak English, and he quickly annulled the marriage.

Despite her brief and unhappy marriage, Anne lived a long and comfortable life in England. She became a close friend of Henry's daughters and was even present at their weddings.

Catherine Howard: The Rose Without a Thorn

Catherine Howard, a cousin of Anne Boleyn, was Henry's fifth wife. She was a beautiful and lively young woman, but she was also reckless and ambitious.

Catherine's brief reign as queen was marred by rumors of adultery. In 1542, she was accused of having multiple affairs and executed at the Tower of London.

Catherine Parr: The Survivor Queen

Catherine Parr, the sixth wife of Henry VIII, was a learned and intelligent woman who survived the dangerous Tudor court.

Catherine Parr was the sixth and final wife of Henry VIII. She was a learned and intelligent woman who survived the dangerous Tudor court by playing her cards carefully.

Catherine was a Protestant sympathizer, and she often clashed with Henry over religious matters. However, she also proved herself to be a valuable asset to the king, acting as a regent during his absences and tutoring his children.

Catherine survived Henry and went on to marry the Lord Admiral, Thomas Seymour. She died in 1548, shortly after giving birth to a daughter.
