What is Auditory Processing Disorder?

Auditory Processing Disorder (APD) is a neurological condition that affects how the brain processes sound. People with APD have difficulty understanding speech in noisy environments, following directions, and remembering what they hear. APD can also affect reading, writing, and social skills.

APD is a common condition, affecting up to 5% of children and adults. It is often misdiagnosed as other conditions, such as ADHD or autism.

Symptoms of Auditory Processing Disorder

The symptoms of APD can vary depending on the severity of the disorder. Common symptoms include:

- Difficulty understanding speech in noisy environments
- Trouble following directions
- Poor memory for what they hear
- Difficulty with reading and writing
- Social skills problems

Diagnosis of Auditory Processing Disorder

APD is diagnosed through a series of tests that assess how the brain processes sound. These tests may include:

- Speech-in-noise tests
- Dichotic listening tests
- Auditory memory tests

APD can be diagnosed by an audiologist, a speech-language pathologist, or a neurologist.
